THE father of Gov. Long, of Massachusetts, a score of years ago wrote to Mr. Emery of the Boston Post, then a lawyer in Portland, asking him to take his son into his office. Mr. Emery replied that he would gladly do so, but added that Boston was a better place than Portland to develop the youth into a first class lawyer. The wisdom of the advice is apparent.

THOMAS NAST, the caricaturist, was born in Bavaria. In appearance he is short, thickset, a sturdy German figure; head large, square and well-balanced; forehead wide, handsome black eyes, firm mouth, a Roman nose, rather small for the face; hair abundant, thick, fine in texture, glossy black, and a walk that indicates a strong individuality and great decision of character.

THE efforts of Dom Pedro to increase the imperial revenues have been met by resistance in Rio, the people objecting to a head tax on street-car passengers. Besides constructing a new system of international taxation, the Brazilian Finance Minister has recently produced a new tariff which is prohibitory to a great extent, and will bear heavily on foreign commerce, especially articles from the United States.

FRANCE loses one of her brightest statesmen in the death of Jules Favre, at the age of 71. High above all—his eminence as an advocate, his brilliancy as an orator and his undaunted courage as a public man—stands the magnificent consistency of his course, throughout all the vicissitudes of French history during the half century of his active political life, as a champion of the Republic, which he has lived to see placed beyond the possibility of overthrow.

A Noble Young Fellow.

A double announcement has appeared, containing the story of a life heroically sacrificed for others. George Herbelin, a young man twenty-eight years old, was house surgeon at the Hospital of Sainte Eugenie, where cholera and diphtheria have been raging among the infant patients during the winter. Mr. Herbelin's devotion to his young charge was the subject of much remark among the visiting physicians and the sisters connected with the hospital. While at the bedside of two children suffering from diphtheria, symptoms of the disease were last week noticed in himself by another medical man, who insisted upon Mr. Herbelin going home. He did so, and died in a few days. While M. Herbelin was on his death bed the circumstances were related to M. Grevy, who quickly had an interview with General Vinoy, Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honor, at whose instance the Cross of the Order was awarded to the young surgeon. It was taken to the dying man, who, overjoyed at the news, exclaimed, "I am decorated! I wish to live—I will live! Cure me, my friends!" He sank back upon his bed exhausted and died clasping the ribbon attached to the cross. The funeral of M. Herbelin will take place to-morrow with marked solemnity, and will be attended by the chief municipal authorities and all the leading physicians and surgeons attached to the hospitals and parishes.

Tattooed Royalty.

There is another event social that has caused Mayfair to titter on its base. An announcement has been made, no one knows whence, to the effect that the Prince of Wales' two sons, who are serving on board a man-of-war, have been tattooed on the nose with India ink. The society journals are hysterical on the subject. It appears that the symbol of a broad arrow has been artistically imprinted on either of the princely nostrils. The thought of bowing the knee to a tattooed king is altogether too much for Mrs. Grundy. The sacrifice wrought upon the countenances of the Lord's anointed has provoked a torrent of indignation. Vanity Fair comes forward to stem the tide. It learns on excellent authority, from a source which it believes to be peculiarly reliable—hinting, indeed, that it is officially charged to make the announcement—that the mark on the side of the nose is only an eighth of an inch long.

MISS ELLIS' ESCAPE.

Eloping with One Lover, But Marrying the Other After All.

DOVER, N. J., Jan. 15.—There is, apparently, no class of men who so quickly set on fire the hearts of country girls, especially in the northern sections of this State, as the employees of railroads—that is, brakemen and conductors. The latter official is generally a perfect lion among the belles of the small villages and towns. Jerry George is conductor of the Dover, Express train on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. He is rather a fine-looking and intelligent fellow, and captivated nearly all the beautiful single women in this town. A few months ago a family named Ellis, consisting of a husband, wife and daughter, moved from Andover and located here. Addie, the daughter, is a comely, attractive maiden, and prior to her coming here she had pledged her hand and heart to Mark Roy of Hunt's Mills, Sussex County, and the day of the wedding had been set. The conductor was speedily enamored of the newcomer. Her mother was pleased with him, and he so thoroughly ingratiated himself that Addie's maternal relative decided that Addie should wed him.

She still loved her first choice, however, and about the holidays Addie sent word to Roy that she intended visiting her aunt—a neighbor of Roy's—immediately after New Year's. She explained the state of affairs at home, the importunings of her mother, and suggested that they had better be married clandestinely on the 2nd inst. The ardent lover acted on the suggestion, and all arrangements for the ceremony were made.

Addie, on the morning of the 2d made a sad blunder, and the mistake has forever separated her from the man of her choice. She wrote her mother that she would become Mrs. Roy. The energetic mother as soon as she received the letter engaged a conveyance and drove rapidly to Addie's aunt's residence. She arrived just five minutes before the time fixed for the marriage. She had arranged with the driver to secure Addie by strategy. As soon as Addie stepped into the carriage he was to drive rapidly home.

Addie obeyed the summons of her mother to step down to the carriage. She was induced to enter it, and the driver whipped the horses and started at a rattling pace. Addie screamed for help, and her lover answered her call, overtook the carriage and compelled the driver to return. It was then mutually agreed that the wedding be deferred for a few months, the mother promising not to interfere.

Before coming home Addie informed Roy that she would write him on the following Sabbath. The letter failed to arrive, and on last Tuesday week Roy came here and called at the home of Addie. Admittance was refused, and like a frank honest lover he called on George and exhibited the missives, teeming with love, he had received from Addie, and entreated George not to press his suit and divide their loving hearts. George like all conductors who live in rural places were inexorable. He declined to listen to the pleadings of poor Roy, and haughtily waved away the letters that were handed him to read. To the surprise of everybody outside of the Ellis and George families Addie yielded to the urging of her mother, and was persuaded to visit Newark on Monday, and there, at the residence of George's brother, she became the conductor's wife. No cards.

Fifty Nine Degrees Below Zero.

Pembina (Minn.) Pioneer. Pembina County, not satisfied with being the banner county for best soil, best water, most timber, best crops, &c., in the best of valleys, the Red River Valley of the North, now comes to the front with a little the best weather on record. On Tuesday evening last, about the usual tea time, the thermometer ranged at 47 degrees below zero. A little after 9 o'clock it stood 53 1-2 degrees, and Wednesday morning it tipped the beam at 59 degrees below zero—colder by six degrees than anything of record in the signal office here, the lowest being 63 degrees on the 13th of January, 1877. This, we are aware, will seem a holy terror to our Eastern friends, and still we came from our office with nothing on our hands, and it didn't seem so awful cold, either. Our people were bustling about on the streets, chucking over the fact that the oldest inhabitant was beaten plumb out of his boots.
